Portals to Be Manned Until All of Exhibits Have Been Shipped From the Grounds.

After to-day all roads will not lead, as heretofore, to the World's Fair. Beginning to-morrow, nine of the thirteen entrances of the World's Fair grounds are to be abandoned and hermetically sealed.
Only the Lindell, administration, States, agricultural, and, possibly, the conven tion, entrances are to maintained after to-day. This arrangement will be maintaining two entrances each on the north and south sides of the Fair grounds.

Those entrances which are to be aband-oned are the Pike entrance, on the north side, with, perhaps, the convention gate; the parade entrance, on the east; the county and general service entrances, on the west, and the Inside Inn. Grandview. Belleview and South Railway entrances, on the south side.

The reason for the closing of the nine gates was the light admissions of the post-Exposition period, and the necessity for economy in the department. The closing of the entrances will dispense with the services of many gatemen and change services of many gatemen and change makers heretofore employed at those gates.

The paid admisisons into the grounds are so comparatively few that the question of abandoning all of the entrances has been considered. This probably will not be done, however, until the close of winter, when it is thought most of the exhibits will have been shipped out of the grounds.

Bradfield, Young and McMurry.

The resolutions were as follows:

On November II, 1904 Mr. R. M. Scruggs, vice president of the St. Louis City Mission and Church Extension Society, passed away. In the death of our dear brother this society has lost its most valuable member. Faithfully attending its meetings, deeply interested in all its work, giving largely to all the enterprises, we feel sadily the loss of such a man. Hundreds have felt the substantial touch of his sympathy. No worthy cause ever appealed to him in vain.

Fearing God above many, grateful to God for his soodness to him. he in turn sought to honor his Lord by helping others. We loved him not chiefly for his sifts, but what he himsel: "as—a beautiful Christian character. The sp. tt of humility characterized him in a marked degree. A man honored in all the relations of life. No man was more generally loved in this city tuan he. We rejoice to believe that he will find himself a rich man in heaven—for he hoeded the injunction to lay up treasures there. He will doubtless find in the heaven deposited to his credit, many a generous deed which he had forgotten, and the prayers and gratitude of a great multitude whom he had helped and encouraged here.

Hesolved, That this paper be recorded in our minutes as a grateful tribute to his mesmory.

Resolved, That this paper be recorded to the city papers, the St. Louis and Nashville Christian Advocates, and the family of the deceased, with whom we sympathias in the loss of a man whom this society, the church St large and the whole etty mours.

Texas is the largest cotton-producing State in the South, and Waco, where the plan originated, is in the heart of the cotton best. The reduced price of the staple affects that city probably to a greater extent than any other.

Judge Williams, in an address before the cotton section of the National Farmers' Alliance, which met at the World's Pair last September, outlined his plain and endeavored to secure the indersement of the national body, but as several other similar plans were discussed before the farmers at that time, no action was taken. It is now the purpose of Judge Williams to have a conference in New Orleans in February, when he hopes to perfect his organization and be ready to issue warehouse certificates on cotton at the opening of the next session.

His plan provides for the organization of auxiliary companies in each county of the everal companies being similar to those of the individual State to the National Government.

He will discuss these plans in detail with some of the local capitalists, who have large interests in the cotton-producing States, and believes that what has been done in the wheat market can be accomplished in cotton.

He proposes to have the cotton stored in the warehouses making the consumer deal directly with the planter for the staple, the surplus staple being carried over from season to season, if necessary. He believes that, in this way, better and more uniform prices will obtain. MRS. SUSAN BALLAGH.
